

We found two beautiful ambrosia maple slabs in South Carolina and knew they would make a fantastic dining table for a kitchen nook. After we got the slabs joined, we added roll-over sides to make them look thicker. Then we deeply sanded the surface and coated it with a thin layer of polyurethane - no stain - to show off the great ambrosia wood. Then we found two cast iron A-shaped hubs from a ship – they were used to support a reel that hauled in rope, or maybe an anchor. Anyway, after figuring out how to support the heavy table base on them, we added an iron cross piece to hold it all together.

Specific size requirement on this table was 36” wide and 60” long. Normally tables are 72” long but this had to fit a small kitchen nook.

Looks beautiful in this nook with the vintage iron chairs!
